

(Harriet Tubman)

Harriet Tubman broke an unjust law when she used the Underground Railroad to bring slaves to the North.

(Susan B. Anthony)

Susan B. Anthony broke an unjust law when she voted in a Presidential election in 1872.

The Struggle Continues

In 2006, Kelley Williams-Bolar broke an unjust law when she removed her children from dangerous, failing public schools and used her father's address to enroll them in better schools in a safer neighborhood just minutes away.

There are women like Kelley across the United States.

We're not advocating that women break the law. But we are asking you to consider whether laws that discriminate against women, children and families are just.

As we celebrate women's history month, let us have the courage, like those brave women who came before us, to challenge immoral and unjust laws.

School choice that would help all low-income children attend excellent public schools no matter where they live is just.

Join the thousands of women, children and families fighting for school choice nationwide.

Find out how at BernardCenter.org

BERNARD CENTER
For Women, Politics & Public Policy

CONNECTICUT
PARENTS UNION
Power Through The Collective Voice of Parents